The as sympathetic toward the idea, if th president's propositions are confined to practical, tangible measures, without attempting anything like general dis-armament, or an adjudication of diffi-culties which touch the sovereignty and honor of states, as would be involved in any scheme of compulsory arbitration. Among the foreign embassies here it was learned by a representative of the Associated Press that the idea of an international peace conference during the Russo-Japanese war would be considered inopportune by Russia, as questions now under controversy benational powers must likely come be-fore it. The necessity for a conferafter the war to define contraband and the extent to which neutrals may assist belligerents by the sale of munitions, is fully recognized.

Also Talked on Tariff and of Disastrous Consequences of Free Raw Material.

Billings, Mont., Sept. 26,-Senator Fairbanks spent the greater part of the day discussing irrigation. The day was devoted to a tour of Yellowstone county, beginning at Glaedive, on the eastern border of Montana, and closing at this point, not far from the center of the state. Ex-Senator Carter who was a member of Senator Fairbanks' party, came in for much praise as one of the early movers to national aid to irrigation from both Senators Fairbanks and Dolliver. Stops for political meetings were made during the day at the towns of Glendive, Miles City and Forsythe, and the night was spent here, where a largely attended and very enthusiastic meeting was Here Mr. Fairbanks returned to the irrigation question, discussing at length the effect of the reclamation act. He recalled senate recommendations for national aid made by Senator Carter when he was commissioner of the general land office in 1891, and after dwelling at length upon the general question of irrigation entered upon a discussion of President Roosevelt's part n securing the enactment of the existing law. On the latter point he said:

"Ten years after Senator Carter brought this great irrigation subject to the attention of the American people we had another American, who dealt with it in a highminded, intelligent way. He had been a part of your citi-zenship for years. He had dwelt here in the semi-arid regions. He knew the conditions and the possibilities. He knew the great future that was await ing you, if you could only bring water to the parched soil of this great coun

That great statesman who compre hended therefore the possibilities that lie before you here, is our president and the next president of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt.

'In his very first message to the United States Congress, he dwelt upon the necessity of dealing with the great subject of irrigation, and pointed out how it was possible to utilize the public domain of the United Staes so as not to draw directly upon the treasury in Washington. He thought it but just and equitable that the proceeds of the sales of these lands should be utilized for the purpose of irrigating this great

"I have just traveled over many miles nspiration of this great policy which Congress enacted into law J am optimistic enough to believe that in the years lying before us there will be homes occupied by thousands and tens of thousands of energetic, patriotic American citizens where there are none

Mr. Fairbanks also referred to the Democratic platform on the subject of irrigation, saying: "The Democratic convention which met in St. Louis deliberately makes claim to having accomplished this great object. It is one of the things upon which it prides itself now. I am not blaming them for that, not at all; they do not have many opportunities to make claim to the accomplishment of any great govern-ment measure. The only way they can ment measure. get a little modicum of credit is to lay claim to the achievements of the Republican party. They usually wait until after the lapse of ten, fifteen, twenty or twenty-five years, before they accept what we did in three years.

"After a Republican Congress enacted the irrigation measure upon the recommendation of a Republican president, a Democratic convention has the ef-frontery deliberately to claim that Democracy is the author of the great irrigation policy. We know better than that. The Republican party knows that the record upon this great subject is written, and children in the years to come will bless the statesmanship of Theodore Roosevelt and the genius of the Republican party for having writ-

Senator Fairbanks also discussed the tariff question, contending that the policy of free raw material would be disastrous to the wool industry of Montana. Referring without mentioning the Democratic candidate's name to Judge Parker's reference to President McKinley's Buffalo speech on reciprocity, he quoted the language of the Buffalo speech, and added: "Our Democratic friends quote President McKinley's speech in Buffalo in support of com-mercial reciprocity. It will be observed that they do not quote all that was said hy the great president, and which is necessary to a fair understanding of his speech upon the subject. They omitted a vital qualification which he clearly and most distinctly laid down, and which cannot be omitted without a clear perversion of what he intended.

"President McKinley did not abandon the protective policy, nor did he favor Democratic reciprocity. He advocated reciprocity which preserved the protective principles, and not that which overthrows it, and which is only another name for Democratic free trade. In his utterances at Buffalo, President McKinley made perfectly clear that the reciprocity which he favored would not imperil our home industries. To reproduce what he said by quoting those portions of his address which expressed a solicitous regard for the pre-servation of our home production is to convey to the people an erroneous im-pression as to what he verily meant and distinctly said."
